(ASSISTANT LECTURER)

HIST 313: HISTORY OF AFRICA UP TO 1500 A. D (ISAAC KYERE)

The course is broadly an investigation into the study and historical developments of Africa from prehistory to 1500 A.D. It studies ancient African civilizations and makes reference to the debate as to whether earlier Eurocentric Historians were right or wrong in the matter of how and whether Africans have a History or not.

The course vehemently argues that Africa since prehistoric times has contributed to world civilization and was brushed with various historical landmarks up to 1500 A.D. It examines the reasons behind man's evolution in Africa and more importantly describes some pertinent ancient developments and their connection to both contemporary African and European studies. Topics in the course includes the introduction to the study of African History, Axum, the Maghreb, Trade and states in Western Sudan and the History about Africa in its Eastern corner.
