

Environmental Conflicts in Latin America.

This course explores the dynamics of collective action deployed in struggles over the protection, control, and/or distribution of benefits of nature in Latin America. The program also discusses different theoretical approaches used to analyze environmental conflict in the region and illustrate trends and patterns of mobilization with empirical research on mining, fracking, and lithium extraction in the southern part of Latin America.