Welcome to the "Mastering the Art of Academic Writing" seminar! Writing a research or conference paper can be a daunting task, but it's an essential step in achieving your academic goals. In this seminar, we will discuss strategies for writing a successful academic text and provide opportunities for group consultation and feedback.

The seminar is not a proofreading or copy-editing service: we establish a dialogue about your text that will help shape its development. Keeping your intended readership in mind, we start with the thought-processes and ideas behind your text, move on to its purpose and structure, and only then – in the final stages of drafting – on to the finer details of style and grammar. We not only provide support for the current writing project that you have, but also foster the development of your English academic writing skills, helping you craft future texts more effectively.

Objectives:

- Understand the structure and purpose of a particular academic text
- Learn effective strategies for writing and organizing your paper
- Receive feedback on your writing and progress
- Gain insights into the writing process from peers and the instructor

Format:

The seminar will be realized with two groups of ca. 4 participants. Participants are encouraged to prepare and send in advance some own text to discuss with the group (e.g. extract from their dissertation, project, paper etc.). The consultation arrangement will provide participants with the opportunity to receive feedback and insights from peers and the instructor.

Topics:

- Understanding the structure and purpose of a particular academic text
- Developing an effective writing process and timeline
- Strategies for organizing and presenting research
- Techniques for effective writing and editing
- Best practices for incorporating feedback and revisions
